

Professor Justine Schneider

She has extensive experience in applied health research and evaluation using a wide range of methodologies. Before moving in 2004 to the Institute of Mental Health, University of Nottingham, Justine's posts included Senior Lecturer at the University of Durham, Research Fellow at the Personal Social Services Research Unit, University of Kent, two years of voluntary work in Lima, Peru, and several years of social work practice in London and the southeast.

With over 100 peer-reviewed publications, Justine is interested in novel approaches to knowledge exchange in dementia care, particularly through the arts. She was responsible for the research-informed play about hospital care for dementia, Inside Out of Mind, by Tanya Myers, which toured to six cities in 2015. She is co-author of Winston's World, a cartoon book drawn by Tony Husband, which offers a pet's perspective on domiciliary care for people with dementia, and is based on participatory observation in home care settings. Her current research focuses primarily on dementia and singing.
